The Teacher's Profession Must Be Made Inviting to the Strongest Talent.

By REPRESENTATIVE S. D. FESS of Ohio, Speech in Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I instituted at the beginning of last month a survey, writing to every state superintendent in the United States, also to a great number of principals of normal schools, also to quite a number of the superintendents of secondary schools. On the basis of the returns salaries of nearly 8,000 teachers in New York city are less than the wages paid to anyone of twelve mechanical occupations in the city | Appomattox Courthouse of Chicago. It is worth, per year, $394 more to carry bricks than to train children, $363 more to mold dough for bread than to mold boys and girls into citizenship of the world's greatest republic. In summing up I make the following recapitulation of my survey:

A lack of teachers to supply the needs of teaching. Pronounced lowering of the standards of efficiency to supply the acancies caused by resignations, and so forth.

Alarming falling off of attendance in normal schools, which are our Striking lowering of the school tone. From the various reports we note that the war demands drained the rofession of its most able, progressive, and ambitious teachers. Since the war many of these have chosen not to return. The country's effort to secure more teachers in a wide campaign has emphasized the fact of loss to the profession and has further discouraged entry into the profession of less desire than others. The emphasis of the past generations upon the material side of life has largely materialized, if not venalized, the profession to the extent that the profession has suffered both from a lowering of the standard of pa-

The country must set about in an intense system of education to embrace every agency of training, especially in our school system to insure against un-American doctrines. These problems of government can not be cured by law, but by education. It is not a matter of restraint, but of attitude of mind. Both great political parties must take a decisive stand to place education upon that basis which will enable it to become the chief agency for the security of a perpetuity of our nation and the things for which it stands. The one supreme demand is to exalt the profession and make it inviting to the strongest talent of the country.

No Maudlin Sentiment Should Prevent Cutting Out Foreign Leeches.

By MRS. G. T. GUERNSEY, Retiring President D. A. R.

To transform a foreign alien into an American citizen is something more than giving a man a new suit of clothes or the woman a hat instead of her flaming kerchief which covers her head. Emma Goldman wore an American hat on a Russian head for twenty years, and the other day sailed back home against her will, still wearing an American hat over her un-
